Actor Bio:

Rachel Delante is from Seattle and has a BFA in acting from Chapman University in California. After graduation, she traveled the world and then touched down in Boston where she started acting in independent films. Her feature film debut was as the star of the drama Whatever Makes You Happy, which won Best Picture at the Treasure Coast International Film Festival in 2011.

Immediately following her first feature, she starred in her next: the dramedy Certainly Never. She went on to play a leading role in the indie drama Shattered Silence which was picked up by Lifetime and has been airing on tv since January 2012, as well as showing abroad in 28 countries.

Rachel played supporting roles in her first period film The House on Broad Street, and in the drama Lockdown; she also recently completed a lead role in her eighth feature: the dating comedy What Now (2015).
